

Also known as: matches, job matches, recommendations, marketplace, jobs for me, careers

Audience: candidate

Last verified: 2026-09-18

Job matches and recommendations

1. What this is

Job matches shows you roles from the platform ranked by how well they fit your profile. Each match carries a fit score and a rank, along with the role's company, department, location, employment type, experience level, salary range and application deadline.

Separately, the public Careers pages list AlgoJob's own open roles — that is a normal job board, not a personalised match list.

2. Who can use it

Every candidate. Matches appear once there are roles on the platform that fit your profile.

3. Names and terms

A user might say	Meaning
matches, my matches	the ranked job recommendations
match score, fit	how well a role fits your profile
marketplace	a page that is not currently functional — see section 6
careers	AlgoJob's own job openings, a public page

4. How it works

- Matches are generated for you from your profile — your skills, experience and preferences.
- Each match carries a score and a rank, so the list is ordered by fit.
- Open a match to see the full role details: company, department, location, employment type, experience level, salary range, notice period, whether remote work is allowed, and the application deadline.
- You can sort and filter the list.

Matches are refreshed for you rather than generated on demand. A brand-new or sparse profile will have few matches or none until there are roles that fit it.

5. When things go wrong

"I have no job matches"

The usual reasons, in order: 1. Your profile is incomplete. Matching works from your skills and experience — fill in your profile and upload your resume. See 20-accounts-and-login.md. 2. There are no roles that fit you yet. Matches only appear when a suitable role exists on the platform. 3. Your matches have not refreshed yet. The list updates periodically, not the instant you edit your profile.

"My matches are irrelevant"

Matching reads your profile. If your resume is outdated or your listed skills do not reflect what you actually do, correct your profile — that is the input.

"A match disappeared"

Roles close and deadlines pass. A role that is no longer accepting applications drops out.

"The match score seems wrong"

The score reflects fit against the role's requirements, not your overall ability. A strong candidate can score low on a poorly-fitting role, and that is the score working correctly.

6. The marketplace page is not a working feature

There is a marketplace page showing badges, avatars and boosts with prices in points. It is not functional. Nothing can be bought there, and XP cannot be spent on anything.

If a user asks about it, say the marketplace is not currently available and that XP is not a spendable currency — it converts automatically into interview credits and moves your level. See 22-xp-levels-and-rewards.md. Never tell a user they can buy anything with XP.

7. Common questions

How do I get more matches? Complete your profile and keep your resume current. That is the input matching works from.

Can I apply to a match through AlgoJob? Open the role to see its details and how to proceed. Where an application route is not offered in the product, route the question to support rather than guessing.

Do recruiters see that I was matched to their role? Matching produces your list. It does not by itself notify a recruiter.

Is the match score shown to recruiters? Treat the score as yours. Do not tell a user recruiters rank them by it.

What is the difference between Matches and Careers? Matches are roles on the platform ranked for you. Careers is AlgoJob's own hiring page.

Can I spend my XP on badges? No. The marketplace page is not functional and XP cannot be spent.

8. What this does not do

- It does not let you buy anything with XP.
- It does not generate matches on demand the moment you edit your profile.
- It does not guarantee a role exists that fits you.
- It does not apply to roles on your behalf.

9. When to contact support

- No matches at all despite a complete profile and a current resume.
- A role that will not open or shows incomplete details.
- Any question about applying to a specific role that the product does not answer directly.